Darren Nealy, MACC Board Member, serves in the hopes of building bridges between cultural competence professionals and the legal community. He is an active member of the Board Marketing and Developing Committee.

Nealy is the Director of Multicultural Affairs at Capital University Law School. He is originally from Dayton, Ohio and currently resides in the Columbus, Ohio area. He received his BA in Communications from the University of Dayton and earned his JD from the University of Virginia.

In the past he tackled issues of cultural competence while serving as a director in the Tobacco Public Policy Center. Specifically, he examined tobacco usage trends and cessation efforts within the African-American community. In addition, he assisted with a public health study (and subsequently published article) regarding indoor clean air laws in the Appalachian region.
